If you have a recent Canon with no mirror, DSLR or PowerShot, now you can use it as a webcam and put everyone else on your go-ahead call to shame. As observed by DPReview, the company launched an EOS Webcam Utility beta for Windows 10 that allows you to connect any of the below supported cameras on USB and have it serve as webcam for your PC. And this should work well for most major video conferencing options, whether you are using Zoom, Microsoft Teams, Bluejeans or other service. These are the supported cameras that can use EOS Webcam Utility. Image: Canon Built by Canon software developers, this beta version software helps consumers improve their video appearance by using popular video conferencing applications on the market, offering clarity and high image quality, wrote Canon in their press release. Canon's solution reduces the need for any additional devices or accessories © m of a single USB cable, so if you have one of the cameras listed, this is definitely worth trying. Sorry Mac users: There is no Webcam use EOS for Apple software yet, but you still have the option of using a capture card with a wider selection of cameras. Pinnacle Video Transfer of this date, taking a TV program with you to watch on a laptop or portable day device means to download it (e.g. from iTunes) or record it using a TV card or capture it from a set-top box on a computer and convert it to costume. The portable digitizer of Pinnacle eliminates the need for a computer, capturing the video directly from its receiver (o r a DVD or VCR player) and transferring it to a storage device (stick ash or external hard drive), iPod or Sony PSP. Simple design is once and a half the size of an iPod Classic with connectors on both sides. A supply of energy and USB 2.0 male and female doors are on one side and S-video, Composite and Phones jacks on the other. Scart included the Scart connector to compile/ phon connected to the Scart's catcher for capture. Connect the storage device foreseen in the Transfer USB and you ar e ready to start recording. Transfer makes good use of LED indicators and simple double button controls (there is REC and MODE). Repeatedly pressing MODE selects from three Good, Best and Best Quality Settings indicated by three Blue LEDs. Press REC and the device lights red. Press REC again and the recording goes through while LEDs blink bright to indicate that the recording is being authenticated.
