Our website displays prices both including and excluding VAT. This equipment must be bought or hired for the personal and domestic use of the VAT free person. VAT free status applies to both the cost of either hiring or purchasing the equipment, and also the delivery and collection charge, should there be one. We find that the main category of people who dont qualify for VAT free status are those looking to hire a wheelchair or other mobility equipment to aid shortterm recovery from an injury. If you do not have to pay VAT, then we will need to know your condition, so that we have a record of it. If you do not qualify for VAT free status on your hire or purchase, then we will have to add the VAT charge onto the cost. Despite its sleeker looks, the Ibis retains all the features and seating options of the Rea Azalea, including tilt and recline ideal for those spending much of the day in their wheelchair. The awardwinning Sedeo Pro seating system can be set up to provide a precise fit for outstanding comfort, support and pressure relief, and the versatile Breezy Ibis can be supplied as either a manual chair, with powerassist, or as a fully attendantcontrolled powerchair.

It can cater to a wide range of user needs, from those simply requiring a much more comfortable wheelchair or postural support for lengthy use, for example care home residents who have had strokes or who have dementia, to those with conditions such as MND, CVA and Muscular Dystrophy that may have more clinical requirements. Our product specialists will assess your requirements to advise on the best configuration to suit your needs, and will provide a wheelchair that has a perfect fit and whose modular nature allows it to accommodate developing requirements. The latter is an option either not found on other models of tilt in space wheelchair, or only as an expensive upgrade such as with the Azalea. The central legrest allows for more foot movement, makes the Ibis more manoeuvrable, and can be provided with additional lateral leg supports if required. The reclined position is popular for those that want to sleep in the wheelchair, as you are in a more laidback and less upright position. These thoracic supports can be easily positioned symmetrically for midline seating, or asymmetrically to support those with preferred angles or scoliosis. The tension adjustable straps can then accommodate kyphosis or other spinal irregularities, to ensure the optimum postural management position is always achieved. A whole range of other seating options are available, from backrests to pressure cushions, alternate legrests, armrests, headrests and further positioning components. Alternatively the Ibis can be provided with thirdparty seating systems, for those who have an existing seating system they wish to port across, or those with the most complex clinical needs. For those forward transferring, the swingaway legrests provide clear space at the front, and negative forward tilt is available. If side transferring, the range of armrest options ensure this is simple to do.

The low seat heights available further assist with this as well as helping with access under desks and tables, and tilt helps to achieve the best seating position when hoisting into the chair. A Power Support version effectively has a powerpack built discreetly into the Ibis, which provides assistance with pushing, and the Powerdrive version is essentially a powered wheelchair with attendant controls. These two powered versions provide a much neater solution than fitting a separate powerpack to the wheelchair, and gives you the freedom to move together particularly ideal when the carer is older or might struggle to push the wheelchair long distances. All three variants are fully crashtested, allowing them to be used for occupied transport when strapped down in a wheelchair adapted vehicle. It offers great seating versatility, with options such as the central legrest and extradeep contour backrest with flexible sides, that aren't found on more standard models. It's also a far better looking wheelchair than models such as the Rea Azalea, with a high finishing of components and a clear design ethos, giving it a clean, modern appearance. The powered options, while a significant increase in cost, offer a neat solution to those who would struggle to push a tilt in space wheelchair, allowing you to retain your freedom. If you require further information on the Breezy Ibis, or wish to place an order, please call us on 0800 0258 005. Our customer services team will be able to advise you on the wheelchair and the options available. We can also arrange for a home consultation, where you will have the opportunity to have a hands-on demonstration and assessment from a product specialist.
